“The devastation of America’s opioid crisis has touched every part of our country, and access to treatment is a matter of life and death. Our national response needs to rise to meet the unprecedented scale of this crisis.” — Paul Tonko

America is in the midst of an overdose epidemic

- More than 81,000 people died of a drug overdose in the U.S. during the 12-month period ending in May 2020, the highest number of overdose deaths ever recorded in a 12-month period
- Overdose fatalities are now the leading cause of death for Americans under 50
- Americans are dying from this illness faster than they did at the height of the HIV/AIDS epidemic that sparked a national movement to address it
- Just 1 in 5 individuals with an opioid use disorder is getting the treatment they need

Access to treatment is a life-saving answer

- For two decades, buprenorphine has been used as a safe, effective and life-saving medication-assisted treatment for individuals suffering from a substance use disorder
- Medical professionals need a special DEA waiver to prescribe buprenorphine to treat substance use disorder, which leads to treatment bottlenecks and a lack of providers
- This outdated waiver requirement has stuck around even though medical professionals can prescribe the same drug for pain without jumping through bureaucratic hoops
- Removing this barrier will massively expand treatment access, making it easier for medical professionals to integrate substance use disorder treatment into primary care settings
- After France took similar action to make buprenorphine available without a specialized waiver, opioid overdose deaths declined by 79 percent over a four-year period

Congress can help stop this crisis!

- After nearly 20 years of safe treatment, there is no good reason to maintain separate, more burdensome restrictions blocking access to safe, proven addiction treatments including buprenorphine
- Practitioners are already required to obtain a license to prescribe controlled substances and meet any state-level requirements to prescribe buprenorphine
- The outdated waiver requirement reflects longstanding stigma around substance use treatment and misleads qualified prescribers to think they can’t effectively treat patients with substance use disorders
- New York, North Carolina, New Mexico, Indiana and others have called for the removal of the federal buprenorphine waiver requirement

The Mainstreaming Addiction Treatment Act

- Eliminates the redundant, outdated requirement that practitioners apply for a separate waiver through the DEA to prescribe buprenorphine for substance use disorder treatment
- Requires the Secretary of HHS to conduct a national campaign to educate practitioners about the change in law and encouraging providers to integrate substance use treatment into their practices
